SEETHER - COUNTRY SONG

Images courtesy of: Digital Rebel PR

The first quarter of 2012 is set to be very busy for post-grunge and alternative metal band, Seether. Not only did they release their new single 'Country Song' in February, but their fifth album Holding Onto Strings Better Left To Fray is out this month. The South African band is also touring the UK in March.

Released in the US last May, their new album has been long-awaited on our shores. The lead single, 'Country Song,' was number one on Active Rock Radio for a staggering eleven weeks, the most played song on the station that year, beating the Foo Fighters, the Red Hot Chili Peppers, and Staind. Furthermore, the single has been named as the number one Active Rock Song of the Year in Canada, and earned the title of number one Heritage Rock Artist of 2011 from Billboard. These achievements combined with the group's highest album charting of number two with Holding Onto String, on the Billboard chart, means that Seether has a lot to be proud of.

'Country Song' itself is a constant, steady drumbeat of twangy, country guitar, bitter yet witty lyrics, gruff and gritty vocals from Shaun Morgan, and a heawvy but catchy chorus with anthem-worthy chants and cheers. As an introductory song to the rest of the album, 'Country Song,' is likely to leave many rock fans desperate for more.

The full Seether tour includes stopovers in Europe, Asia, and Australia. http://www.seether.com/

FOO FIGHTERS - THESE DAYS

Images courtesy of: Digital Rebel PR

The all-conquering Foo Fighters released their fourth single, 'These Days' from seventh album, Wasting Light, last month and were voted "Best International Group" for the second time at this year's Brit Awards. A digital single released under Roswell/Columbia, has been described by Dave Grohl as his "single, proudest song writing moment." Musically simple, lyrically lucid yet paradoxically complex, 'These Days' is both memorable and catchy. The lyrics are often prophetic, sometimes bitter, always world-weary and fascinating.

It's hardly surprising that the Foo Fighters keep going from strength to strength. Wasting Light was a worldwide number one, and a multi-platinum record that has been nominated for countless awards. The band took home five Grammy awards, including best rock song and best album; the most awards won by a group after Adele's six. Foo Fighters performed on our side of the pond last year with appearances at the Isle Of Wight Festival and the T in the Park Festival, and two nights at the Milton Keynes bowl, both of which sold out. It was there that the band conducted a three hour 'Foos Love-In,' a performance combining their classics and newest songs to 60,000 fans.

To watch the video for 'These Days' by Foo Fighters, click on the following link:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=TNLhxlEU52c

http://www.foofighters.com